The standard apparatus consists of a Jackie-Debrie portable self-contained projector working from a main supply. The light is derived from a half-watt lamp, a cooling fan is fitted, and the machine is motor driven. After showing, the films are re-wound on the machine itself by a very simple mechanical device. The Will Day sound head is fitted just in front of the projector, and to bring it into use the ordinary film feed loop is increased by a few inches and threaded through the sound head gate and back to the re-wind sprocket in the usual manner. The exciter lamp is carried in the cavity beneath the projector. The pack or first stage amplifier is also contained in the same compartment, thus it will be seen how accessible every portion of the instrument has been arranged, and how readily the uninitiated could master the functioning of the whole apparatus.
